Twitter and the Law...How to avoid getting in Twouble

Twitter makes it easy for users communicating to large audiences over the Internet. There's very little preparation that needs to go into what you're going to say and in seconds you can conceivably communicate your message to millions of people.

The technology now allows people to tweet not only short texts messages but videos as well. This raises copyright issues should users tweet videos that they themselves didn't create.

original works of authorship fixed in a tangible medium. By default, the creator of the work owns the copyrights. They may choose to assign or license these rights so others may exhibit their works on websites such as twitter.

Users of the popular website should be careful not to post videos of copyrighted works without the creators express permission. Otherwise they may be accused of copyright infringement.
